

James Wood and
award winning project
St Margaret's Church,
Angmering

Newly qualified architect James Wood 01/12/09

Congratulations go to James Wood of Lee Evans Partnership who has just qualified as an Architect.

James studied his RIBA Part 1 and Part 2 at the University for Creative Arts at Canterbury and his RIBA Part 3 Postgraduate Diploma in Architectural Professional Studies at The University of Greenwich. He is a key member of Lee Evans Partnership's highly successful ecclesiastical and conservation architectural team. Recent projects include RIBA Grade II* listed St Margaret's Church in Angmering, West Sussex which was a RIBA Downland Prize 2009 winner and which formed part of his final project submission.

James says he enjoys the challenge of finding new and creative ways to design and construct contemporary additions and alterations to historic and ecclesiastical listed buildings. The most rewarding aspect of his work is he believes working closely with clients to deliver a building that not only meets the needs of the end users but is contextual to the historic character of the building and its environment, whilst making a clear statement of what is old and new.
