

Lee Evans Partnership launches a new environmental and sustainable building consultancy

Lee Evans Partnership LLP has recently launched Elements, an environmental building consultancy. The new consultancy will focus on helping clients create sustainable, healthy and energy efficient, low carbon buildings, which are both practical and commercially viable.

Element's Lead consultant Chris Palmar said, 'We offer our clients friendly, professional advice and guidance on projects ranging from new build to the upgrading of existing domestic and non-domestic buildings to help our clients comply with legislation as well as create responsible buildings for future generations.'

Chris is a licensed Code for Sustainable Homes Assessor and Elements is a member of the sustainable building association, AECB. What makes the company different is that consultants get involved from early concept stage and stay involved through to project completion to ensure that the initial targets identified are achieved. Elements also offers post completion building performance evaluation.

For more details on Elements and its sustainable and environmental building consultancy services visit www.lee-evans-elements.co.uk or contact Lead Consultant, Chris Palmar on 01227 784444.